Abstract
Distributed computing challenges are hard and annoying in terms of programmability, data distribution and failures. High-level abstractions try to simplify distributed programming by hiding challenges: Provide different levels of robustness to failures, optimizing data movement and communication, protect against race conditions. In this lecture, we will mainly talk about Map-Reduce for data-parallel problems and GraphLab for graph structured distributed problems.